

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Just as reading is never done in complete isolation, so too is writing. Indeed, I have learned over the past several years, while in the process of completing the dissertation, that writing is more of a community event than I had ever imagined. There are a number of communities who have influenced my thinking about interpreting a text theologically and therefore have a part in the final production of the dissertation, though none of the responsibility for its shortcomings.

I must first acknowledge the influence, love and support of my family. David and Sondra Spinks, my Daddy and Mama, have made me who I am in ways that I discover anew everyday. I cannot put into words the love I have for them or the love I have received from them for the last 34+ years. The friendship of my brother, Brad, is more special to me than he will ever know. The entire Spinks-Stewart-Campbell family, centered around Kilgore, Texas, has demonstrated the complex dynamics of a loving community that surely influenced the ideas in my work.

The several local church communities with whom I have been privileged to sojourn have also shaped my notions of theological interpretation. During my formative years the good folks at Hickory Grove Baptist Church, and later First Baptist Church of Kilgore, gave me opportunity to explore and question my faith, as young boys are prone to do. The communities at First Baptist Church of McGregor and Calvary Baptist of Waco encouraged me as I began to develop as a minister of God's word. I owe all of these communities a debt of gratitude.

My circle of friends and mentors has had a direct impact on the nature of my work. First and foremost, I must acknowledge the incredible influence my mentor, Donald Hagner, has had on me as a person and a scholar. Both deeply engaged in the academic pursuits of biblical scholarship and fully attuned to its significance for the larger Christian community, Don models for me the sort of scholar I want to be. As well, his care and concern for students and colleagues as more than people attached to an academic institution has been demonstrated to me in very personal ways, especially when my life outside of the dissertation would sometimes get rough. Marianne Meye Thompson's careful and thoughtful comments on the penultimate draft of my dissertation made the final product a much more cohesive work. Similarly, Nancey Murphy's feedback at several places along the way helped me to think through some of the philosophical puzzles present in discussions of scriptural interpretation. The semi-regular meetings, during the writing stages, with Jeff Phillips and James Van Slyke gave me both moral support and fresh insight into several knotty hermeneutical problems. If it were not for the support and encouragement of Samuel Paul I would not have had the push to finish my project. Finally, Chad Pecknold provided encouragement and counsel that went beyond the call of a friend and foreshadowed the excellent advisor he will one day be for those students who are privileged to work with him.

In the end, this dissertation would not have been completed without the love and support of my wife, partner and best friend, Gail. It is to her that I dedicate this project and my undying love.
